Two birds were in good condition but the hen was below par. The normal green hen of Garry Menzies was down on condition on the day, after being ill the previous day, however, this bird and the Light Green cock of Alan Kent's were considered to be superior birds to the Dark green cock which was a trifle narrow in the head and neck compared with the other two.

BENCHED Position 5th

H George (BNSBS)

All three birds were in good condition. The two Skyblues of Charlie Chiang and Henry George both sat and showed well on show morning whilst the third blue pulled in and was all over the cage and would not show, resulting in it looking to have inferior head qualities to the other two. It also had a large amount of blue in the neck and wings. As two of the blues were owned by selectors, Jim Fletcher – a Tasmanian National Judge – was brought in to give his opinion, and he selected the two birds that were benched.

All three birds were in good condition but the hen of Jim Parrish was dirty in the vent and had to be washed on the morning. (There was no hair dryer in the preparation area and unfortunately the Parrish hen had not fully dried out at the time it was staged and was placed much further down than otherwise it would have done, in what was a strong class of Albinos.

This was a very hard class to judge as the class across the board is the same standard and none jumped out to say “here I am”. They kept changing all the time but the quality is high. The winner is a credit to the owner. Sat all the time – has good roll, good eye line and a lovely mask.

JUDGES COMMENTS

This was an interesting class. Markings are supposed to be 10% to 20% but when you get size you have ticking and flecking. It is very hard to get a good Recessive Pied without ticking and flecking. This is a lovely class of recessives and is a credit to the breeders. First was unsettled but when he did show he has lovely depth of mask and spots. He is a little down on body weight but still a worthy winner.

These were three good quality hens. The Cinnamon Light Green owned by Henry George had a large wide head and good size and was the first selected. The Spangle of Bob Smith, although slightly shorter than the Opaline Green, had superior head qualities. The Opaline hen was heavily flecked and was not clear in the "V". The Spangle was superior in both head qualities and variety characteristics and was consequently selected.
